

Tina Esposito

Named as one of the Most Powerful Women in Healthcare IT by HealthData Management and featured on the January 2016 cover of their magazine as an "agent of change", Tina Esposito is the vice president of the Center for Health Information Services at Advocate Health Care.

Tina joined Advocate in 1999 as a statistical data analyst at Lutheran General Hospital. She has served in various Advocate system roles including director of the Center for Health Information Services beginning in 2008 and promoted to Vice President in 2012. Tina and her team are responsible for system measurement and analytics in support of improved patient outcomes and organizational performance.

Tina serves as the Advocate executive for strategic oversight of the Advocate Cerner Collaborative (ACC), which has leveraged Cerner and Advocate resources to jointly create a population health management platform for Advocate. This platform includes a big data strategy, advanced analytical models, and deployment of these models into clinical workflow.

Additional areas of responsibilities include data warehousing, HIM, and public data.
Education and Awards

Tina has a Master in Business Administration degree from DePaul University, Chicago and a Bachelor of Science degree in Health Information Management from the University of Illinois at Chicago. She also is a Fellow in the American College of Healthcare Executives and a certified Master Black Belt in Six Sigma.
